The standard editing presets from the preset panel will show up, as well as the edit tools, which appear as a pop-up palette. The sliding bar with the Yes and No buttons can easily be hidden. If you are looking for a bit of fun with a camera app, I Can recommend the APP. It Eliminates the need for going on long hikes to get a great photo. Like most other APP alternatives, it's extremely simple. A photo will be taken, edited in real time, and sent directly to your favorite social media channels. The other major difference is that the image will not be cloud-stored, so you will be the only person to have access to it. This is convenient and well-known. Finally, the app inherits some very interesting camera features from Sony's previous F series. Like the ability to use a wire to make a digital wide-angle viewfinder, and the addition of a vertical axis turning tracker to get the proper angle. My major issue with APP is that editing becomes too complex. I'm a bit confused by some of the features in the adobe products. My understanding was that file format conversion was only for web based photo editing (It is for me), so I cannot figure out why multiple files were converted. I am also unclear about the conversion to smart previews. I was told by Adobe about smart previews and automatically converting to DNGs. Is it required to do?
